"Justice" Department actions to bring down Microsoft seem anything but just to me. Microsoft has built just about the best mousetrap that has ever come on the scene in a country once noted for recognizing and rewarding business endeavors that benefit the entire country. And Microsoft has made a tremendous contribution to the development of information technology that is beneficial to our entire economy and America's continuing leadership in the business world. They have done this in a fair fight in a highly competitive game and, because some of their less successful competitors have whined, DOJ has decided to punish Microsoft's success. Where is fairness; where is justice; where are integrity and honesty? Let's get on with rewarding success rather than punishing it. And at the same time, let's stop punishing those, including self, I proudly note, who have recognized Microsoft's contributions by investing in Microsoft stock and find themselves also financially abused by inappropriate government intervention in a highly successful business enterprise that has vastly benefitted the entire country including those who would tear it down. Please let us pursue both justice and sanity, allowing business acumen, common sense and market forces free rein.

Respectfully,

Jack S. Kenyon
